With a population of nearly 7.5 million and very little developable land remaining, Hong Kong has become the least affordable housing market, making so-called 'coffin cubicles' common. United Nations have condemned these nightmarish cage-apartments as an insult to human dignity but according to the Society for Community Organisation, for some 200,000 people it's still the only alternative.

Coffin from Hong Kong (1964) - IMDb

Coffin from Hong Kong (German: Ein Sarg aus Hongkong) is a 1964 West German thriller film directed by Manfred R. Köhler and starring Heinz Drache, Elga Andersen and Ralf Wolter. It is based on a novel of the same title by James Hadley Chase. The film's sets were designed by the art director Nino Borghi.

A Coffin from Hong Kong by James Hadley Chase

Released in the U.S. as "A Coffin From Hong Kong", this was one of a whole series of relatively low budget German noir/espionage/thriller type films made in the early to mid sixties. Although the scripting of these films is often trite to the point silliness, they are generally well acted, and usually set (though not filmed) someplace other ...
