After an introductory chapter on the nature of criticism, Barrett suggests a process for criticizing photographs that includes description, interpretation and judgment. The author also suggests a classification scheme for photographs which he believes could be useful in forming judgments, although I found it no better than many other taxonomies and at times difficult to apply to many photographs.

Criticizing Photographs – Terry Barrett (1999) This is a pretty good introduction to the area of photography criticism. I'm not going to attempt a summary of an entire book but suffice to say Barrett is big on classification. He starts by classifying the act of criticism into four activities: describing, interpreting, evaluating and theorizing.
