Directed by Mervyn Pinfield. With William Hartnell, William Russell, Jacqueline Hill, Carole Ann Ford. When the TARDIS malfunctions and the doors open in the time vortex, the travelers and their Ship shrink to the size of insects. When they arrive on Earth, they uncover a murderous plot involving a new insecticide - but how can they stop the crime in their miniaturized condition?

Doctor Who: Season 2, Episode 1, Planet of Giants - video ...

Planet of Giants is an unusual story for classic Doctor Who in that it's set on modern day Earth and doesn't feature any time travel. What makes the story stand out is that due to technical reasons, the TARDIS and her crew are shrunk during materialisation, and the Doctor, Ian, Barbara and Susan are reduced to less than an inch in height.

Doctor Who: Planet of Giants - BBC Shop US
Doctor Who: Planet of Giants (story 9, from 1964) shows just how much the first season or two of Doctor Who was a product of late-1950s science fiction. In this episode, the Doctor (William Hartnell), Barbara (Jacqueline Hill), Ian (William Russell), and Susan (Carole Ann Ford) appear to have successfully traveled back to 1960s Earth.

Doctor Who (Classic): "Planet Of Giants" - TV Club

Planet of Giants was the first commissioned serial of Doctor Who's second season and it was duly anticipated by viewers in 1964, according to the Radio Times at least. I have previously owned the VHS version of this serial, which was the first to receive the VIDFIRE process, and I always thought that it was an interesting story, though maybe a little too convoluted as a season opener.
