Pinworms in Dogs. Many dog owners mistake tapeworms for pinworms because the worms look similar. Both parasitic worms attach in the intestines where the adult worms lay eggs. At times, you may see small tapeworm segments outside the anus, much like pinworms crawl from the anus. This explains why many people confuse the two.

Pinworms in People and Pets

Pinworms and whipworms are both intestinal worms. They are also caught in a similar way, by contact with the respective eggs. Thus, children become infected when they don't wash their hands after visiting the bathroom, while dogs can ingest whipworm eggs when they groom fur with eggs clinging to it.
