Flowers in the Blood by Gay Courter review

Here, Courter (Code Ezra, 1986, etc.) writes of a Jewish heiress to an opium empire who braces scandal to become a formidable defender of her own and her family's vital interests. Dinah Sassoon was never a delicate beauty like her mother, Luna, and the gossips whisper that it's just as well. Too tall, too intelligent, and far too pushy to suit 19th-century Calcutta's intimate Jewish community ...
