Some say the best-written reviews and critiques reveal something about the critic as much as the subject being reviewed. With that criteria, you would think Forty-one False Starts by Janet Malcolm would be brilliant, the writing being so self-absorbed. To be fair, the title essay was fascinating and engaging, a critique of the larger-than-life artist David Salle told in 41 short sections that ...

Attacks From Within: On Janet Malcolm | The Nation

Forty-One False Starts is a collection of Malcolm's essays on writers and artists, and it reads like Malcolm on a both serious and affectionate visit to an art museum, gavel in hand. But Malcolm is not a righteous egomaniac. In her essay on the Bloomsbury group, "A House of One's Own," Malcolm writes: "I have, like every other ...
