Laurie Colwin's essays on food and cooking are short, funny, bracing, helpful, and never sentimental. She died far too young, and her essays deserve to be read widely by anyone who loves food, cooking, and good writing. Each chapter is a short essay (most originally published in Gourmet) on a single topic.

A few weeks ago, we joined The Kitchen Reader/ A Food-related book club. This is our first experience in an online book club, and we received a warm welcome along with our first mission: to read and write a post about the book Home Cooking: A Writer in the Kitchen, by Laurie Colwin. What does this have to do with Peruvian food, you may ask?
