Carl Sagan (November 9, 1934–December 20, 1996) was many things — a cosmic sage, voracious reader, hopeless romantic, and brilliant philosopher. But above all, he endures as our era's greatest patron saint of reason and critical thinking, a master of the vital balance between skepticism and openness. In The Demon-Haunted World: Science as a Candle in the Dark (public library) — the same ...

Pluralistic ignorance - Wikipedia
Surprise (pronunciation (help · info)) is a brief mental and physiological state, a startle response experienced by animals and humans as the result of an unexpected event. Surprise can have any valence: that is, it can be neutral/moderate, pleasant, unpleasant, positive, or negative. Surprise can occur in varying levels of intensity ranging from very-surprised, which may induce the fight-or ...

Not PC: “There’s two kinds of ignorance...”
The omen above was put to print in 1995 and echoed throughout Carl Sagan's prolific career as both practitioner and communicator of science. Swathed in a world so joined at the hip to science and technology, Sagan saw denial and ignorance of science as the greatest risks to human well-being and continuity. Is the past here to stay?

Cane toad has surprise effect on Australian ecosystem
There's two kinds of ignorance. There's the things we don't know, and then there are the things we think we know, that aren't true. The things we know that we don't know -- that we wish we understood, we wish we had access to the truth. There are things we think we've discovered as true that, in fact, are not.

It is no surprise this came out of the intelligentsia and their universities. But a perfect example of the Scientific Dark Ages that we live in. A cult-like worship of fake science is here. We no longer have science, just the religion of scientism. Scientism is based on faith (trust the science) and loyalty (don't question it).
