repressed personality had contributed to her sickness, she surmised.

The fantasies concocted around cancer,

“Illness is the night side of life, a more onerous citizenship. Everyone who is born holds dual citizenship, in the kingdom of the well and in the kingdom of the sick. Although we all prefer to use the good passport, sooner or later each of us is obliged, at least for a spell, to identify ourselves as citizens of that other place.”

Sontag stimulates a careful re-evaluation of the place of metaphor in our thinking about illness. She touches upon, but doesn't do much with, metaphor intrinsic to medicine; she alludes to the "war against cancer," but doesn't develop the general notions of physician as warrior, physician as priest, physician as engineer, etc.
