Bean plants are known as the harbingers of summer seasons, as they provide the first vegetable harvests while still providing pods even during the summer. They require proper care and maintenance, like all plants, to continue producing beans for harvesting, so you'll need to ensure that all parts of the plant are in good health, down from the roots up until the leaves.

Take care, however, to not give "cold" water to your bunny, even if it is a hot day. Doing so could cause your bunny to have stomach problems and may even cause him/her to go into shock. Giving a handful of damp vegetables is another way to get water into their systems, especially if they don't seem to be drinking much on their own.
