Yes, it's possible to ask for what you want without coming across as a jerk, says social psychologist Adam Galinsky. When we have lots of power, our range is very wide and we have a lot of leeway in how to behave. But when we lack power, our range narrows and we have little leeway. The problem is, when our range narrows, it produces something called the low-power double bind: if we don't speak up, we go unnoticed, but if we do speak up, we get punished.
