The formation of cross linking networks in a fluorinated ...

Network formation is an aspect of network science that seeks to model how a network evolves by identifying which factors affect its structure and how these mechanisms operate. Network formation hypotheses are tested by using either a dynamic model with an increasing network size or by making an agent-based model to determine which network structure is the equilibrium in a fixed-size network.

3.4. Cross-linking using enzymes. An attractive method was devised to create PEG-based gels via using an enzyme by Sperinde et al. They functionalized glutaminy groups with tetrahydroxy PEG (PEG-Qa). To aqueous solutions of poly (lysine-co-phenylalanine) and PEG-Qa, addition of transglutaminase resulted in the formation of PEG networks.

The latest work on the coacervation and cross linking stages highlighted in this review sheds new light on the molecular complexity of these processes and suggests heterogeneous interactions and cross linking of the monomers. Yet, many questions remain to be answered before a complete picture of the formation of elastic fiber networks is ...

In particular, Young's modulus increases from 444.6 to 681.9 MPa, and the yield strength increases from 20.3 to 27.9 MPa. Results demonstrate that due to the cross linking effects, the mobility of the molecular chains is inhibited by the formation of a three dimensional network.
