I've been working recently with a student who "presented" as a student struggling with physics. But in many ways, the physics is less issue than applying mathematics to the physics concepts. Their text is Glencoe's Physics Principles and Problems, which some reviewers describe as much as a math text as a science text.

Favorite answer: I'm going to assume that your question is just badly worded, as the chance of you being born on your own birthday is obviously 100% for any live birth. The chance of anyone being born on your birthday are 1 in 365, or if you're born on February 29th it's 1 in 1461. My mum hit the jackpot with that as my brother was born on her birthday, 10th January. I then met and ...
