Seamus Heaney, "North" – Rethink.

Wrestling with questions about his current status and mindset Heaney has felt the need for solitude; he would benefit in his uncertainty from the reassurance of a counselling voice. The speaker revisits a stretch of the Donegal coast, a shod of a bay. The sounds he is hearing recall the god Thor who in Viking mythology hammered to create land, sea and heavens.

Poem North by Seamus Heaney - Essay

Analysis Of Seamus Heaney's North North So here we see Heaney, as voice of the poem, alone it seems, returned to a lonely "long strand" of Atlantic shoreline, hammered into a specific geographic shape in, I think, a blacksmithing image—"hammered shod." He stands before the immensity of what he beholds, the alone quality and the ...
