Hang rods as high as possible: this elongates the room and makes the ceilings appear taller. Consider sheer curtains: if you have a view that's not necessarily bad, but perhaps interferes with your privacy but you still want the light to come in, consider sheers. Use double rods: if you have space where you'd like to hang both sheers and solid panels, you can purchase double rods.

Designers Share When You Shouldn't Put Curtains on Your Window

No one could accuse net curtains of not doing their job: to keep out prying eyes. But the trad designs can be a let-down in the style stakes, gather dust and look pretty dated. The good news is there are masses of great – and affordable – ways to replace them with something much more practical (and better-looking).
