Shades of Milk and Honey (Glamourist Histories): Mary ...
Shades of Milk and Honey is a novel set in an alternate Regency England where genteel young women are expected to learn how to cast glamours as well as cover screens and knit purses. In an early scene, the protagonist Jane—a talented user of such glamours, though overlooked by many because of her plainness—tutors another young woman about glamours, showing her how the folds of light she's making are too clumsy, her stitches too obvious, the overall effect crude.

Shades of Milk and Honey is actually my fourth completed novel by the time I wrote it I'd seen enough other friends go through process that I knew it was lengthy. I think the thing that surprised me most is how many other Austen based fantasies have come since I first started this.
