I'm kind of new to the Reddit world but I am familiar with the concept of tl;dr. What I want to know is who decided tl;dr's belong at the end of a post? If people are looking for a summary so they don't have to read the whole thing, wouldn't putting tl;dr at the top spare them all the scrolling, or act as an abstract for people who aren't sure if they want to read the whole thing?

Why is tl;dr put at the end of posts instead of the ...

The exact origins of TL;DR are unclear, but its first Urban Dictionary entry appeared in 2003. It likely arose in opinionated discussion forums, where posts can quickly turn into long rants. Today, you can find TL;DR posts and comments all over social media, computer help forums, texts, and emails.
