Something to keep in mind is that if you aren't going to use your mobile hotspot that often, many phones with plans can be used as a Wi-Fi hotspot. But since this will tap into your current data plan, you may not want to use a smartphone as your primary hotspot if you need to use it often or for heavy Internet use. Also remember, using phones as hotspots will

Network - Mobile Wi-Fi hotspots operate off of existing cellular networks, so you want to make sure you're choosing one that's reliable in the area you're going to use it. Some carriers work very well in urban areas but not rural (or vice versa). When in doubt, choosing an AT&T or Verizon device is a good bet.
