Aelred of Rievaulx - Wikipedia

Subtitled 'Monastic Writings of the Twelfth Century', this 'Penguin Classic' goes some way in meeting that need, delving as it does beneath the often bland commentaries on medieval thought in most textbooks to reproduce the actual words written by a succession of twelfth-century Cistercians.

The Cistercian World - | Public

This anthology of Cistercian writings range from the golden period of the 12th century Reformation, by Bernard of Clairvaux, William of St Thierry, Aelfred of Rievaulx and others. By concentrating on texts concerning the Cistercian order, the anthology provides an introduction to medieval monastic spirituality.

This is a collection of monastic writings centered around those who were part or associated with the Cistercian order. The most well known figure present in this book for many is Bernard of Clairvaux, but there are a number of other pieces by lesser known authors.

The Cistercian World: Monastic Writings of the Twelfth ...

A decade or so later another Benedictine monk, Orderic Vitalis, who was born in England but spent his life from the age of ten in a Norman monastery, spoke of the Cistercians as a new breed of monks: "Monasteries are founded everywhere in mountain valleys and plains, observing new rites and wearing different habits; the swarm of cowed monks spreads all over the world.

The Cistercian World, Monastic Writings of the Twelfth ...

This is a wonderful selection of Cistercian monastic writings from the 12th century. While Bernard of Clairvaux is well-represented here, as he should be, the book also includes important writings from other Cistercians of the period. It was very nice to see these others included, especially since many sources tend to focus almost solely on Bernard.
