“It was octarine, the colour of magic. It was alive and glowing and vibrant and it was the undisputed pigment of the imagination, because wherever it appeared it was a sign that mere matter was a servant of the powers of the magical mind. It was enchantment itself. But Rincewind always thought it looked a sort of greenish-purple.”

White magic heals and protects creatures. Mages that use white mana prefer to send an army of smaller creatures into battle, but sometimes a single, awesome champion is necessary to teach the enemy a lesson. Blue. Islands provide blue mana, the color of the deep sea and the endless sky. The strength of blue magic lies in trickery and manipulation.
