Kadi is a remarkable case in many ways and it has been warmly greeted by most observers. The article argues however that the robustly pluralist approach of the ECJ to the relationship between EU law and international law in Kadi represents a sharp departure from the traditional embrace of international law by the European Union.

1 Introduction. The Kadi case 1 is perhaps the most visible and interesting case of the European Court of Justice (CJEU) for external relations in recent years. The Court essentially had to decide whether a United Nations Security Council resolution should enjoy primacy over EU law. We all know that the Court did not allow for this primacy.
