They philosophized that the king had two bodies: one "politic" and one "natural" (Kantorowicz 7-9). The body politic was immortal, and governed the land in all things – this was the divine aspect. This body's word was indisputable law; this body was assumed to be in every courtroom (5); and this body led England and English society. But this immortal body required physical form to act.

The King's Two Bodies: A Study in Medieval Political Theology

Kantorowicz argues, somewhat counter-intuitively, that "The King's Two Bodies" is a monophysite construction--while purporting to be an analogy between the King and the divine, it actually takes the form of a heretical Christology (14-15; see also p.18).

For the King has in him two Bodies, viz ., a Body natural, and a Body politic. His Body natural (if it be considered in itself) is a Body mortal, subject to all Infirmities that come by Nature or Accident, to the Imbecility of Infancy or old Age, and to the like Defects that happen to the natural Bodies of other People.

Ernst Kantorowicz - Wikipedia

Kantorowicz uses Edmund Plowden's Commentaries in which it is argued that a king has two bodies: a natural one (body natural) which still might be a minor, but also as king a political body (body politic) which is freed from all mortal and natural defects. Whenever the king acts with his body politic, no restrictions of his body natural are in force.
