The Mansion | novel by Faulkner | Britannica

The novels in William Faulkner's Snopes trilogy are mainly comedies, uneasily as they may sit in that category. The Mansion begins with Mink Snopes, on trial for murder, waiting for his successful cousin Flem to show up and use his power and influence to get him off. Flem doesn't come, and Mink spends his prison sentence biding his time until he's free and can murder him.

The Mansion (Vintage International): William Faulkner ...

The Mansion is loosely constructed around the story of Mink Snopes and his long planned revenge. In The Hamlet one reads how he killed Jack Houston in an argument over a cow and vowed revenge on Flem when Flem failed to come to his defense during the trial. All this is amplified in the new book, and we are told how, with the help of Montgomery Ward Snopes, Flem tricks Mink into an attempted escape from jail in order to lengthen his term.
