Satyricon The Satyricon of Petronius Arbiter ... ` Are our rhetoricians 1 tormented by another tribe of Furies when they cry: ` These scars I earned in the struggle for popular rights; I sacrificed this eye for you: where is a guiding hand to lead me to my children? My knees are hamstrung, 2 and cannot support my body ` ? Though indeed even these speeches might be endured if they smoothed the ...

Petronius, Satyricon, section 1
The Satyrica is a thrilling piece of literature, and rare example of the Roman novel, credited to Gaius Petronius which is as modern today as the time it was written under the Roman emperor Nero. This is the first comprehensive commentary on the whole of Petronius' Satyrica, and is an attempt to unify and comprehend, as much as possible, the fragmentary text by looking carefully at the bits ...

Arbiter, Gaius Petronius (27–66) - The Satyricon: Part I
The vagrant heroes of Petronius are the originals from whom directly, or indirectly, later authors drew that inspiration which resulted in the great mass of picaresque fiction; but, great as this is, it is not to this that the Satyricon owes its powerful influence upon the literature of the world.
