The Spider's House may be as good as The Sheltering Sky, but I am still processing. Some of Bowles' most beautiful descriptive writing is in this novel, particularly of the city of Fez, and the Moroccan adolescent, Amar, may be the most complex and finely drawn character in all his fiction. I shall say nothing about the plot.

Paul Bowles - Wikipedia

The Spider's House (1955), the longest and most complex of Bowles's novels, is set against the end of French rule in Morocco. Its characters—ranging from a Moroccan boy gifted with spiritual healing power to an American writer who regrets the passing of traditional ways—are caught up in the clash between colonial and nationalist factions, and are forced to confront cultural gulfs widened by political violence.
