Women Who Hurt Themselves: A Book of Hope and ...

Women Who Hurt Themselves explores the suffering of women who reenact childhood trauma, particularly abuse or neglect, through self-destructive behavior. Miller is a therapist who has treated hundreds of women with this condition (which she labels Trauma Reenactment Syndrome, or TRS) and whose behaviors include self-mutilation, alcoholism, drug addiction, and eating disorders.

Teens, Cutting, and Self-Injury: Causes, Signs, and Prevention

Far too often therapists and others in the counselling field misdiagnose and mistreat those who are suffering from TRS. This book offers hope to those who inflict pain upon themselves by outlining the limitless forms in which the abuse can manifest itself. She makes women who hurt themselves feel less alone. I would highly recommend this book
